PRESENTATIONS AND REPORTS FOR ACTION

7. Facility Naming and Public Art Update: Rob McCullough, Manager, Museums and Heritage Services (oral report).

Mr. McCullough provided members an overview and updated the group on the facility naming process along with the public art call.

Facility Naming

- The City is currently working with Castlemain Group (“Castlemain”), an Indigenous advisory consultancy group hired by the City, to engage members of the Indigenous community to meet and seek feedback on NWACC facility naming. Castlemain has sent out invitations for the inaugural meeting of the advisory panel.

Public Art

- An inquiry was made about the timeline for the public art process as it was previously thought to be a time sensitive issue since it was to be associated with the naming and inform the design of the facility. The group was informed that the process is in alignment with the project timeline and it has not hit a critical point therefore does not need to be flagged.

Mr. McCullough continued to give updates and inform the group on the Public Art project for the NWACC.

- A public art call for the NWACC project was released in August 2019. The project has received 16 responses which are going to an independent jury that includes representation from the City's Public Art Advisory Committee (PAAC).

- The first phase of the adjudicated process has been completed, resulting in a shortlist of five proponents.
- On January 31st, 2020 the jury will receive presentations from the proponents followed by an interview. A contract will then be offered to the chosen artist(s) sometime early 2020.
